

Kathleen Winter

Dreamy

When I meet the Devil, handsome he and me fly in a vivid little airplane at the State Fair, dangling from a chain—

we're laughing, circling through the neon-spangled night, our transportation tethered to a pole—when the show tunes and the engine sounds cut out, people I love perceive me cryptically from the ground.